Key Takeaways

The price of copper braided cable tray connections varies depending on braid type, size, and supplier, typically ranging from tens to hundreds of dollars per piece.

Product Overview

Copper braided cable tray connections, also called braided copper links, are flexible connectors used to bond sections of cable trays or provide grounding and earthing connections. They are usually made from tinned or bare copper braid and crimped at each end for secure attachment. Tinned copper is preferred in damp or outdoor environments due to its corrosion resistance, while bare copper is suitable for indoor applications.

Factors Affecting Price

Braid Type and Flexibility: Flat, round, or rope braids differ in flexibility and manufacturing complexity. Rope braids are the most flexible but also the most expensive.

Wire Diameter and Cross-

Section: Smaller diameter wires increase flexibility but occupy more volume, raising the cost. Standard diameters include 0. 05 mm, 0.

1 mm, and 0. 2 mm. Length and Current Rating: Longer braids or those rated for higher current carry more copper, increasing the price.

Supplier and Region: Prices vary by supplier and shipping location.

U

K and European suppliers like Copper Braid Products and ETS Cable Components export worldwide, including the USA. Sourcing and Pricing GuidanceETS Cable Components offers braided copper cable tray links manufactured from tinned copper braid, crimped at each end, suitable for industrial and commercial installations. McMaster-Carr and Amazon provide braided copper for grounding and flexible connections, which can be adapted for cable tray use.

For exact pricing, it is recommended to request a quote from suppliers, specifying the braid type, length, and current rating, as prices fluctuate with copper market rates and order quantity. In general, small standard braided links may cost around $20–$50 each, while larger or specialized braids can exceed $100 per piece, depending on specifications and supplier.
